3 Ways to Better Street Shots

By Gary Lashmar
(aka the Street Thief)

STOP WAITING TO FEEL READY

If we are waiting to feel inspired before we do anything creatively or we are waiting until we have more time or have the right equipment etc then we will be waiting a long time. There is always an excuse not to do it. The more barriers in your way the faster your progression will be.

BE CONFIDENT WHEN OUT SHOOTING

If you are afraid, it will be sensed. When this happens people are more likely to pounce. It is an unconscious acting out of their part but nevertheless is a very real threat to your street photography success. If you don't feel confident ... make it up. Pretty soon how you feel will fall into line.

LOOK BEYOND THE SURFACE

Most photographers are scratching the surface when it comes to taking photos. This is why most photographs are shallow and repetitive. For our images to have character and depth we must mine for quality, we have to dig deep in the moment and see beyond the surface of things. This means getting outside of our thinking and looking at where we are right now and asking the question ... what is it I'm not seeing here?
